ASMC Gulf Coast Members,

And another fiscal year cycle is under way! In our office we are heading full speed into fall with Fall Program Reviews, Program Management Reviews, Cost Estimate Reviews, Non-Advocate Cost Assessments, PEM parades, and POM submissions! Whew. Thank you to Justin Neece from the Air Force Cost Analysis Agency and all who joined us for lunch at Clemenza's, it was timely to learn about AFCAA and its role in the POM process. If you missed the brief or were there and would like a copy of the presentation, please email me and I will get a copy to you!

Thankfully, in addition to all of our FM duties this season, we also get to look forward to the upcoming Holiday Season. This means for most of us celebrating with family and friends, and indulging in sweets and treats and good home cooking! Hopefully it also means reflection, a time when appreciation and gratitude is found and expressed for even small things we can be thankful for. Take a moment to find time to volunteer in your community and for the organizations you are involved in. Look for a volunteer sign-up sheet at the November luncheon (details page 4), and see page 5 for community service opportunities.

Back to the sweets and treats, I love a good homemade apple pie as much as anyone and I plan on having my fair share! What better way to allow for such indulgences than to balance it out with some good old fashioned working out

(Not to mention all of the other great benefits – improving productivity and decreasing stress both at work and at home during the busy Holiday Season!) ASMC in fact is hosting its first ever 5K Walk/Run starting at Schooners in Bluewater Bay on December 12th, and I'm planning on running/walking. That means I should really start training, so here is an open call to anyone who would like to join me - I plan to start regularly "training" for this on Tuesday Nov 3. (all levels welcome, beginner's especially!) Email me for details or with questions, would love to see you out there and get to know more of you!

(If participating in the Walk/Run isn't your thing, check out the volunteer opportunities at the event as well, we will need help with registration and water stations!)

Budget Deal Passes, but Shutdown Threat Still Looms

by Eric Katz, Oct.30th, execgov.com

The Senate on Friday passed a budget framework to set spending levels for the next two years, but lawmakers have yet to complete their work for funding federal agencies.

The bipartisan deal, which passed with near unanimous support from Democrats but only a minority of Republicans in both chambers, raises sequester caps by $80 billion over fiscal years 2016 and 2017. While the deal sets the top-line spending levels, Congress must still write and pass line-by-line appropriations to establish funding levels for each agency.

Lawmakers normally would pass 12 individual bills to fund each area of the federal government, but the Dec. 11 deadline virtually assures that Congress will instead approve a sweeping, all-inclusive omnibus measure. President Obama expressed optimism the budget deal, which his administration negotiated directly with congressional leadership, would avoid the fiscal showdowns that have plagued the funding process and left agencies in the lurch in recent years.

"It locks in two years of funding and should help break the cycle of shutdowns and manufactured crises that have harmed our economy," Obama said.

The Republican-led Appropriations Committees in both chambers made progress on spending bills prior to the recent budget agreement, but those were based on spending levels below even sequester caps and stood no chance of approval from Senate Democrats or the Obama White House. The president and congressional minority complained the Republican-backed funding bills would drastically shortchange federal agencies and prohibit them from properly carrying out their missions.

With sequester caps lifted, Obama called on Congress to advance clean appropriations bills without “poison” riders, such as a provision to defund Planned Parenthood.

“This bill will allow for certainty in the budget process for the next two years -- something that has been greatly lacking in this recent era of government shutdown showdowns,” Rogers said. “With this stability, Congress can make thoughtful, responsible decisions on how to fund federal agencies and programs, and avoid the unnecessary waste and harm that comes from lurching, unpredictable budget cycles.”

He added his committee will now begin the “hard work of negotiating and craft” an omnibus bill.

“As always, we will go line by line through agency budgets and make decisions to ensure the best possible use of every taxpayer dollar,” Rogers said. “I look forward to this essential and important work, and to the completion of the Appropriations process before the December 11 deadline.”

Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said he will use his existing, unpassed spending bills “as the basis for negotiations with our House counterparts.”

“Our final work product should responsibly provide the highest level of support to meet our national security needs, invest in national priorities like medical and scientific research and adopt much-needed oversight measures to rein in government overreach,” Cochran said.
